NOTES IN BRIEF

The Britain GDR Society publishes a quarterly bulletin for its members. Information can be obtained from Sheila Taylor, Secretary, The Britain GDR Society, 129 Seven Sisters Road, London, N7 7QG, England.

Ian Wallace, Lecturer in German at Dundee University, is planning to bring out a journal on the GDR sometime this year, covering all aspects of life there, including literature.

A reminder to those who might have forgotten about the availability of films from the GDR Embassy. Films are of the short documentary/informative kind, as well as feature length reels, such as Horst Seemann's "Beethoven-Tage aus einem Leben" (reviewed in the Bulletin in our Winter 78 issue), Egon Günther's "Lotte in Weimar", Frank Beyer's "Nackt Unter Wölfen", Konrad Wolf's "Ich War 19" and "Mama, Ich Lebe", Roland Gräfs "Die Flucht". To order, contact Petra Teutschbein, Cultural Attaché, Embassy of the GDR, 1717 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington, DC, 20036.

A brief reminder regarding the Fifth International Symposium at the World Fellowship Center in Cambridge, N.H., which will take place between June 15 - 21, 1979. Full details appeared in our last issue.

Re journal reviews: We at the Bulletin staff would like to include short journal reviews in future issues. Lacking the time to pursue this project ourselves, we therefore invite you to contribute to the Bulletin by reviewing a journal of your choice for us. We suggest any one of the following titles: Neue Deutsche Literatur, Sinn und Form, Weimarer Beiträge, Deutschland Archiv, Deutsche Zeitschrift für Philosophie, Kursbuch, Alternative and Konkret. We are also open to reviews of any other journals which you think would make a meaningful contribution to the Bulletin. We strongly urge anyone interested in this project to contact us.

TRAVEL AND EXCHANGE

Frank Hirschbach of the University of Minnesota will be holding a summer seminar from June 18 to August 10 on the German Democratic Republic and its literature. The seminar, funded by NEH, will deal with the relationship between politics and art in the GDR. Some attention will be paid to GDR history and Kulturpolitik before proceeding to a study of GDR prose, drama, and lyric poetry. "The approach will not be chronological and historical, but will deal with such themes as work, the individual and society, class struggle, realism and fantasy, comedy as a means of criticism, heroes and heroines, aesthetic standards for evaluating socialist literature." Applicants must be able to read German with facility. For further information contact the German Department at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis. Frank Hirschbach is currently at the Karl-Marx-Universität in Leipzig working on a project entitled "Youth and Literature in the GDR". This project is funded by an IREX grant. 1

CONFERENCES

Special Session entitled "The Dialectics of Orthodoxy: The Socialist Personality in Non-dissident GDR Literature" will be held at this year's MLA. The seminar will provide a framework for examining the works of GDR authors who are (with some exceptions) not well known in the West. The papers should test the assumption that the non-dissident literature of the GDR is politically and esthetically homogeneous. Although it is difficult to define the term 'non-dissident', one criterion could be whether or not a given writer signed the petition protesting the expatriation of Wolf Biermann in 1976.

selected list of non-signers: H. Baierl, G. Görlich, P. Hacks, C. Hammel, H. Kant, R. Kerndl, E. Nachbar, E. Neutsch, J. Nowotny, H. Otto, E. Panitz, H. Sakowski, M.W. Schulz, Erwin Strittmatter, Eva Strittmatter, A. Wellm, P. Wiens, J. Wogatzki. Papers should be 6-8 pages (ca. 10 minutes). Send abstracts by March 1 to:

INTERNATIONALER HOCHSCHULFERIENKURS
The 1978 Internationaler Hochschulferienkurs für Germanistik, held in Weimar from July 2 - 24, was attended by more than eighty persons, including at least ten participants from colleges and universities in the United States. Other countries represented included Italy, Norway, Finland, Great Britain, France, Denmark, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, USSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, and New Zealand. Last year's topics included a tribute to Brecht, in celebration of his eightieth birthday, and the discussion of new tendencies in GDR literature of the seventies. Apropos Weimar, Herder's contribution to Germanistik was included as a theme of the program. In addition to these three focal points, five workshops covering relevant topics were organized ("Zur Gegenwärtigen Situation der DDR Literatur", "Frauen in der DDR: Prosa der Siebziger Jahre", "Entwicklungstendenzen der Deutschen Gegenwartssprache" "Kurzprosa der DDR", "Gegenstand und Methoden der Spezialsprachlichen Ausbildung"). Lectures by prominent members of the academic community were supplemented by presentations by leaders in the economic and political spheres. A survey of the state of the performing and visual arts in the GDR was possible through field trips and assorted cultural activities.

The summer courses sponsored by the GDR are known for their careful organization and educational value, and the seminar at Weimar was no exception. The staff members, many of whom included faculty and students from the Univ. of Jena, were eager to answer questions, and their interest in the participants extended far beyond any official obligations. Discussions were open and frank; the results generally were clarifying rather than confusing.

The constant exposure to many new situations and opinions generated a pace that was very demanding, and many of us had trouble sorting our own impressions and ideas in such a short span of time. Most exciting for me was the contact with other colleagues from socialist countries, whose research and studies were not available to me before. In sum, the three-week sojourn in the GDR left me with a new set of possibilities for academic work, and a host of new questions about the GDR. I strongly recommend the summer seminar to students and professors interested in the GDR and concerned about international developments in the field of Germanistik. There is much to be learned and transmitted, especially for those of us teaching in the United States.
