1-1-1997

Raindrop

Michael Cadwell

Follow this and additional works at: <https://newprairiepress.org/oz>

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 4.0 License.

Recommended Citation

Cadwell, Michael (1997) "Raindrop," Oz: Vol. 19. <https://doi.org/10.4148/2378-5853.1295>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by New Prairie Press. It has been accepted for inclusion in Oz by an authorized administrator of New Prairie Press. For more information, please contact cads@k-state.edu.

Raindrop

Michael Cadwell

The Disappearing Island

Once we presumed to found ourselves for good
Between its blue hills and those sandless shores
Where we spent our desperate night in prayer and vigil,

Once we gathered driftwood, made a hearth
And hung our cauldron like a firmament,
The island broke beneath us like a wave.

The land sustaining us seemed to hold firm
Only when we embraced it in extremis.

All I believe that happened there was vision.

Rain Drop was built during the summer of 1994 at the DeCordova Museum in Lincoln, Massachusetts with the assistance of Dick Brown, Jason Cadwell, Donald Gibson, and Phil Parker.

A translucent butterfly roof supported by four timber chairs directs rainwater to a central drain and drops it onto rocks set in the deck below. The primary materials are concrete, cedar, steel, and fiberglass.

Photography by T.Charles Erickson.