Best Practices for Faculty Searches

Jeff Buller

ATLAS Leadership Training, jeffbuller@mac.com

Follow this and additional works at: https://newprairiepress.org/accp

Part of the Educational Leadership Commons, and the Higher Education Administration Commons

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Share Alike 4.0 License.

Recommended Citation

This Event is brought to you for free and open access by the Conferences at New Prairie Press. It has been accepted for inclusion in 38th Academic Chairpersons Conference Proceedings by an authorized administrator of New Prairie Press. For more information, please contact cads@k-state.edu.
Department chairs usually play a key role in hiring faculty members for their programs. Either they make the hiring decision themselves or they recommend candidates to the dean or provost. But chairs usually resort to a process for conducting searches “because we’ve always done it that way” or “because that’s what they did when I was hired.” But these practices are not always the best practices.

In this workshop we’ll explore:

- Why the factors we look for in a typical search are frequently not the factors that result in a faculty member’s success or failure.
- Why interviewing itself can lead to poor hiring decisions.
- Which interview questions are informative and which interview questions are (for all practical purposes) useless.
- What frequently overlooked signs to look for when a candidate visits campus.
- How to use video interviews more effectively.
- How to write more effective job postings.
- How to handle internal candidates and incumbents more effectively.