Prairie Poets

Steven Hind

Follow this and additional works at: https://newprairiepress.org/sfh

Recommended Citation

To order hard copies of the Field Journals, go to shop.symphonyintheflinthills.org.

The Field Journals are made possible in part with funding from the Fred C. and Mary R. Koch Foundation.

This is brought to you for free and open access by the Conferences at New Prairie Press. It has been accepted for inclusion in Symphony in the Flint Hills Field Journal by an authorized administrator of New Prairie Press. For more information, please contact cads@k-state.edu.
AT HOME IN A WORD
by Steven Hind

You call this blanket of grass Prairie, because you were born a member of a tribe who took to the lean feast in that name.

Your lips hold the word in to give thanks just so: Prairie, you say, and hear the grass speaking through the thorny wind season after season. You sit wrapped in that word.

— from In a Place With No Map: New and Selected Poems

THIS SKY
by Harley Elliott

This is the sky I belong to.
Those used to embrace of Forests or buildings find difficult purchase here.

As if they might slip anchor Pulled slowly up with Nothing to grab or slow
The diminishing rise

Into that ceaseless round.
Every step they take a prayer to gravity.

Some need this upside Down ocean of wind waves Gentle to reckless
And at floodtide rattling

The laces of their shoes.
When you see only sky
In every direction but down you are put in your place equal to the mosquito who claims the same resounding blue only once upon this time of a sky to be lived in.

— Published here for the first time
WHAT WOULD HAPPEN IF YOU WALKED HERE?

by Caryn Mirriam-Goldberg

What would happen if you opened to something so totally beyond human that it dissolved your borders into bluestem? What if it rained and you got wet? What if you understood not just that the earth tilted but that it tilted right through your spine and that’s why you occasionally fall over?

Nothing prepares you for the real. There’s no journey out of this except the one that separates your bones from your thoughts, your tendons from the lines of your desire.

In the giant mouth of the dark, in the opening screen of the dark, in the bottom of the pot of the dark, is the dark that isn’t so dark.

In the myriad call of meadowlark layered on siren of coyote upon clanging of wind in cottonwood tree is also the sound of no sound, too. Nothing can prepare you for the speed of the universe. Nothing can steady you enough to absorb even the fact that light travels millions of years to get to your eyes, that the dissolved dust of stars are your thoughts and your thinking, that the sky is so big, that the dirt is made of bones and breath, that there’s nothing heavier than the ocean, that there’s no such thing as exact replicas in the seasons, and that seasons pour through us like rain or dust whether we’re paying attention or not, that a rabbit can outrun you in your prime, that language is only partially made of words, that the earth cannot help but to keep recycling you into something better.

reprinted from Animals in the House with permission

Steven Hind is a native Kansan, growing up near Madison on the eastern edge of the Flint Hills. He attended Emporia State University as an undergraduate, and received his Master of Arts from the University of Kansas. He began teaching literature at Topeka High School in 1965, and retired 36 years later from teaching English at Hutchinson Community College.

Harley Elliott is a poet and visual artist living in Salina, Kansas. He earned his B.A. from Kansas Wesleyan University in Salina, and his M.A. from New Mexico Highlands in Las Vegas, NM. He taught art at Marymount College in Salina for many years, and then worked at the Salina Art Center.

Caryn Mirriam-Goldberg, received her Ph.D. and M.A. from the University of Kansas. She is the 2009-2012 Poet Laureate of Kansas. Her career as a poet, fiction and non-fiction writer, teacher (Goddard College, Plainfield, VT), mentor, and facilitator focuses on how literature can help us live more meaningful and vibrant lives. She is the author or editor of 11 books, including her recent poetry collection, Landed.