A Tree Story

Willis Huston
Carl Keiser

Follow this and additional works at: https://newprairiepress.org/sfh

Recommended Citation
https://newprairiepress.org/sfh/2012/stories/1

To order hard copies of the Field Journals, go to shop.symphonyintheflinthills.org.

The Field Journals are made possible in part with funding from the Fred C. and Mary R. Koch Foundation.

This is brought to you for free and open access by the Conferences at New Prairie Press. It has been accepted for inclusion in Symphony in the Flint Hills Field Journal by an authorized administrator of New Prairie Press. For more information, please contact cads@k-state.edu.
Old-timers tell the story about an old elm tree that was the only landmark on the first trail between Osage City and Americus, a distance of about twenty-six miles. It could be seen for miles in all directions. At Osage City travelers were told to go straight west until they got to the tree, and then to turn south toward the Neosho River, which could be seen as a winding band of bur oaks in the distance. The tree was located between 142 Mile Creek and Bluff Creek. Both creeks eventually flow into the Mississippi. The tree is located at the top of these watersheds.

Bushong came into existence just yards northeast of the tree. It was thought that a large rock protected the tree from prairie fires when it was a seedling.